

The Dewyletter

Oversharing and making it your problem since 2025! September 2025

Updates From Dewy

Well, if you haven't heard yet, my roof caved in a bit. Apparently, my building used to be a single residence and there was an old dumbwaiter where my kitchen now is. The hundred-year-old mechanisms finally gave out after having torque pressure exerted on them for so long. Once we got over the shock, it was kind of cool. Pictures are on the Instagram if you want to see.

Other than that, have been trying to take it easy this month. I'm really bad at that.

This Past Month on the Blog

Five new entries have been made since the last issue of the Dewyletter. Two of them are short poems about charity and that certain invisible crown. I also released a listicle about the three scariest moments I had encountered during my stay in silly jail. Lastly, I have a mock interview that was prepared from the point of view of someone trying to discredit Title Goes Here, which was an interesting exercise. Lastly, I had the opportunity to tell a story at a Moth event in NYC (and that story is on the blog).

Your Regularly Scheduled Dewy (Monthly Events)

One and Done Events

I have a number of interviews/reviews about the book coming out this month. Be sure to watch my Instagram for further details. I also plan on doing another Moth event this month, but am unsure if I'll actually be speaking or not due to the format of the show.
